N Cockes perch Lewon, Jackass, Dun, Grung In These drawate scenes of japanese painting the unity is not formal and obvious, may appear even to be lacking. but the same principle of a untuke relation conceived of as the unifying factor is to be found also in the Japa= nese designs of flowers and birds. In fact, we were recognize that at bottom it is landscape which controls M The Type of Japanese os of Climese painting. Figures and groups are Le Treated as pools of a landscape might 1 be treated. We are dealing with L an act which differs from ordropean Æ artius we have said before, in the July si absence of that concentrates at= tesetion on the human from which 04 is at the core of Western Painting

The six canous of Hsich Ho crystallise the Conceptions of art which had already long persoled the winds of his countrymen (6th cent.) First Comes ryllunic vitality, or, as Mr Ukakura translates it the life survement of the spirit through The rythin of thilis! Next comes organie stouctube. The creative spiritins cornales itself in a pictorial conception Structure of life. Third comes the law of conformily with wa: Ture; fourth appropriate colous rug tifth, arrangement, seeth, the transmission of Classic uns dels. Throughout the course of Atian painting The idea that art is the unitation of nature is unknown or known only as a despoised and fugitive hirety.

This infinite linking of associations, these lundred typulpalues, 1 give to Climese landscape a cohesion a solidarity, a human interest which Co it for from Triviality and shallowness ac in Contrast the tendency in ourope - - -CK The great subjects of all art and postry hi are commonplace.
